

GLENARM WALLED GARDEN

The walled kitchen garden was built in the late 1820s, roughly at the same time as work began remodelling the house into a neo-Jacobean mansion, a short distance to the east. The adjacent frame yard was added in the 1840s, while the well maintained lean-to glasshouse is mid-19th century and later in date. The garden retains its original grid layout, complete with a yew circle planted in the 1850s. Over the past fifteen years the present Viscount Dunluce has undertaken a major programme of developing and expanding the plantings and opened the garden to the public in 2005.

BENVARDEN WALLED GARDEN

This walled garden of about 1½-acres was already in existence when Benvarden was acquired by the Montgomery family in the 1790s. Described as 'well stocked and very productive' in 1832, it preserves its original layout and remains a kitchen garden. Its neat rows of fruit and vegetables, espalier fruit trees, paths bordered with box and greenhouses, combined with shrub borders, roses and parterres, this garden, uniquely in Ulster, retains its Victorian character
